An estimated 1 billion birds die from window collisions each year in North America - with 99% of these strikes happening at residential and low-rise buildings. Calculations show an average of 10 birds per residential home die annually in the United States. These deaths are preventable if people take action at their own homes! Please join us for a crash course on bird-window collisions: Stop the Strike! Creating Bird-Friendly Windows at Home. Former board president Susan Fisher will break down why birds fly into windows, how big the problem really is, and most importantly, what simple steps homeowners can take to stop these deadly strikes.

After moving out of Manhattan in 2005, Susan Fisher discovered a deep love for the natural world right in her own backyard. She drew inspiration from her Aunt Vilma, an enthusiastic lifelong birder, as well as from the family of Barn Swallows that reliably nested beneath her covered front porch for five consecutive years. Susan has become a dedicated presence in her community's conservation efforts. She is a longtime volunteer with Bedford Audubon, where she also served as a board member and later as board president. She currently works for Westchester Tree Life, where her love of nature continues to shape her path.
